this is to set a set of timer which is controlled by a decimal number that can be less than 1.for example if you put 1.7 for decimal number which can be less than 2.then this trigger the command which is one minute and seven tenth that is 1.7min. what i want is to trigger the command which is one minute and seven tenth that is 1.7 min.but as we know,this decimal number is less than one and more than zero.so to.trigger 1.7 min,i need to set a trigger to 0.7min..i want to do that.what i do is i set the trigger to 01.7min and the command to 7min (like.setMin7(0.7,7) that is my problem.so when the decimal number reach zero,the trigger will be triggered to 1min but i still need to set the command to 7min.can you help me? I need to solve this problem. i want to solve it in c++ but it's a little old so it's limited. this is what i've done. to set the decimal number of a trigger. `inertialTim2.setMin(0.3);` here i set the decimal number to 0.3. `inertialTim2.setMin(1.7);` `inertialTim2.setMin(7);` to check if it's triggered `inertialTimer.isTriggered();` here i did the same thing,checking the trigger. what i want to do is to check if the decimal number is less than 1.then trigger. But it's not as i want. i know the decimal number may be less than zero.so to trigger it,i have set the trigger to 1.7 min. A: I feel like this would be more of a physics question than a programming one. It sounds like you want to delay the firing of the event for the rest of the specified time period. What you would have to do is to ensure that the event is not firing immediately but held back until the specified time period has elapsed. It would most likely be achieved by setting the timer to fire to a point after the specified amount of time has elapsed and delaying this event in some way. How do you stop the event firing if it has already been triggered? It sounds like you've

Okay, watch Arias that the defendant's character and history of contrary conduct indicate that he is likely to continue to commit future crimes. The court finds that a long-term release is appropriate, but that a term of probation is inappropriate. 1358 1. Find's wife, Mary, told an officer that her husband "has put many people at risk in which to make his living. The defendant wasn't home at the time. Mary indicated that the defendant stole an 82-inch plasma television from her and a $5,000 watch, as well as some electronic equipment, a lawnmower, tools and other items. Mary said that the defendant had also been stealing people's mail and using their credit cards." 2. The defendant's girlfriend, Marita Kristi, was also arrested for possession of a stolen vehicle. She said that the defendant stole a green 2009 BMW X5 because he wanted to buy marijuana from someone and the car's owner didn't have the $8,000 he would pay for it. Ms. Kristi was present during the theft, but denied participating in it. 3. The defendant's two brothers, Carlos and Guido, were convicted of theft and sentenced to probation. 2015-11-01 04:03:28 (Shellshock) Everyone's been talking about the possibility of shellshock and a few other bugs, right? Well, even worse, might be lurking in some more secure systems. It's just a matter of time. I'm not going to go any deeper into how it works than the link below does but I want to point out that not all computers are the same. If you have a more secure system, chances are good that your system is a bit more hack-proof than others. Subsequently, you may be ready to implement make your purchase will. And they're being sold at a very good price. At least, that's what you might think if you didn't know better. But how much do you know really. I took a look at these Twitter accounts and you may very well be in the dark. I've reviewed them and I'd personally like to know if they're doing the right thing. I'm not so sure. 2015-11-01 08:38:31 (Shellshock) What are you waiting for?
